

INFOCOMMUNICATION TECHNOLOGIES AS AN INSTRUMENT OF MANAGING INFORMATION RELATIONS IN CORPORATE ENVIRONMENT

©2009 A. N. Zapolskaya¹, O. A. Kononov², O. V. Kononova²

¹Institute of Design Technology Information Science, Russian Academy of Sciences

²Saint-Petersburg Institute of Management and Law

The paper deals with a multilevel model of an infocommunication system in terms of management sociology. A method of assessing sociological hazard for various levels of the model is proposed.

Infocommunication technologies, information relations, corporate environment, sociological hazard.

Zapolskaya Anna Nikolayevna, post-graduate student of the Institute of design technology information science, Russian Academy of Sciences, e-mail: zap-ann@yandex.ru. Area of research: questions of society informatization, using ICTs for the development of information society, CALS-technologies.

Kononov Oleg Alexandrovitch, head of the department of information technologies, candidate of technical science, professor, Saint-Petersburg Institute of Management and Law, e-mail: o2kon@mail.ru. Area of research: questions of society informatization, electronic education, non-destructive methods and devices for quality control of materials and products: magnetic, ultrasonic and acoustic control, microprocessors for built-in applications: measurement control, signal processing and presentation of results in quality control.

Kononova Olga Vassilyevna, associate professor of the department of information technologies, candidate of sociology, Saint-Petersburg Institute of Management and Law, e-mail: o2kon@mail.ru. Area of research: using ICTs for the development of information society and knowledge economics, electronic development of Russian regions, CALS-technologies, sociological research in the area of information technologies, telecommunications and information policy in the context of integrating Russia into a global information society.